multitude of arrangements requested attention. Isaac W. Seender as Chairman, who Gen. Sickles appeared at this moment, on platform, and was heartily cheered. Mr. Seender made a brief address. In part, he said, the inauguration of the present showed the spirit which animates the people of this State, and this County—the same spirit which had shown itself in the North-West, and would be manifest in the South. Over this wide land, until the Union was practically restored, with Grant as President, and Sherman as Commander in Chief, the positions for which they had been chosen, as also three Secretaries. The Rev. Mr. Seender made an impressive, appropriate prayer. He said: "In Thy name we dedicate this building to Thy service; to the service of truth; in the name of universal freedom; and to brotherly love."

Z. K. Panchborn, gracefully in a few remarks to the Republican party of Jersey City, we closed the evening; not alone those who had been in the house. After the band had played "Round the King," Gen. Sickles, was perched upon a chair and in an enthusiastic manner said:

"I am invited here to attend a meeting in a hall where a proposition of a wigwag was that it was a hibernian family. I find here tabernacle large as many numerous tribe. [Laughter.] It seems to me the Republican party of Jersey City must be nearly the population of Jersey City. Is it so? No the last census, or else the Republican assemblage of Jersey City for the honor of meeting the Republican party."

The people are rising en masse in their devotion to their loyalty; and it is evident from the enthusiasm from this multitude present here, that New Jersey intends to emulate the noble example of Massachusetts. It is evident to me that throughout the land throughout the North, a great uprising that we had in 1776 is evident that the same patriotic spirit is stirring and fires the loyal hearts of the land; and we would prove that treason has no more room in the North than it had on the battle-field. (Applause) I have something of the spirit of the people of 1776. I have had the honor to lead many of our regiments in the field, and the forces of the North are in the field, and which we see here to-day, are familiar to me. They were among the many well fought fields of Chancellorville, Gettysburg, and I feel delighted to know that

 What branch of this Government ever dealt with the

 They propose, after stigmatizing the holders of Ameri-

trap to the thousand people on whose ignorance they draw, with greenbacks. Why, fellow-citizens, I understand that the Government has been so miserably deceived, that a fight with Congress has been in, not with withdrawing from circulation four hundred millions of non-interest-paying, undischarged notes, but with the issue of new money. I am sure that the Government has not been so misled, and that the Government is not to be misunderstood. The notes are what are known as greenbacks in circulation, $100,000,000 of the face of them. The Government is not to take them as money. On their face they are payable to the bearer on demand, but they are not cash at the United States Treasury, the amount that they represent, on demand, and they are not paid. Now let me tell you where they are, in consequence of the Government's refusal to take them as money. They are worth $20,000,000 to-day, and that it is conceded by every man in this community. His note of hand to-day, wherever it is accepted, is because he has the credit. If he should refuse to pay these notes, his credit would be at a discount, and he would have to give the note-bonds in greenbacks. But if he ask what the greenbacks will be discounted at 50 per cent., what would $100,000,000 be discounted at? Well, you can guess it. If the Government refused to take them as money, it would not take them, and it would support his family only if it. The notes of the Government would not be worth the rags. No, not even rags, for there is no account of them. And that is the plan that this infamous rag proposal is to this nation. Hissing and cheering, with some confusion, the Government has been deceived, and those men who has, his Seymour. I tell you it is on universal his from Maine to California, applause and approval. I tell you that the Government will grant be elected by the most triumphant major-

It is a President who has never elected to the office of President of the United States. He is a President who has never been elected to the office of President of the United States. It is rotten. (Enthusiastic applause.) Now could it be otherwise. They undertook in this country to make a President of the United States, and a hundred Rebel officers who murdered our poor President to make a candidate for the office of President of the United States. (Applause.) And you, that you have heard the news from Maine! Is any wonder that California at the other end will return, and certainly for Grant! (Cheers.) Is it any wonder that Democrats having any regard for the opinion of the people, will not vote for Grant? (Applause.) He is defeated and routed to-day! And you, fellow-citizens of Irish birth, I am glad to know that everywhere you are cheering for Grant. You are cheering for Grant, and attempt to regain power, and to ally yourselves heretofore to the party of liberty. (Applause.) Let me give you an example for you. When in the great closing scenes of the war our own Sheridan, (great applause,) at the battle of Cedar Creek, was surrounded by the rebels, and candidate in those words, or nearly these: "If things are pushed I will surrender." [Copperheads?] But, fellow citizens, without having pursued the line of argument that I intended for myself, I think I have occupied your time long enough. I have no more to say, except a very kind invitation on your part, but there are gentlemen here whom you and I want to hear. I am not much of a talker, I am glad, to push things. [Applause.] I would say, in conclusion, to you of the Irish Republicans, Oh, all credit and honor to you, adopt as your motto all from now until November, be—“Push things.” Tremendous applause.

Dr. John O'Connor of the Irish brigade, who was introduced as one of the leaders in the late Irish rebellion, expressed his feelings on the present condition of Ireland when he called attention to the fact that Mayor Hoffman, when invited to preside at the banquet, had accepted the invitation on the grounds that his official position would not allow of his so doing; but afterward, when the meeting in aid of the refugees was organized, he made no such distinction. He said that Mayor Hoffman was a Jew, and that because Mayor Hoffman, like the balance of the party which he represents, is influenced, directly or indirectly, by the Jews, he would not be present.

Mr. R. L. Lytle, esq., a favorite Fenian orator, was the next speaker. He said that an Irishman was supposed to be a Democratic principle, and that he was a native-born Irishman from the Emerald Isle, and that he was a native-born Irishman from the Emerald Isle. The speaker asserted that one of the greatest leaders of the Democracy, Mr. August Belmont, had been accused of having in his hands $250,000 of the money belonging to the Fenian fund.

gronmied," that it was raised for an unlawful purpose. At the close of Mr. Lyddy's remarks, the meeting adjourned amid loud cheers for Grant and Cuffax, Griewold and Cornell.

The great Republican wigwag, in City, just completed—a structure of great length by ninety feet in width, and which cost $20,000, and extends from Montgomery to York sts., the north-west corner of the building resting on Henderson-st.,—was dedicated last night, with exercises of the most enthusiastic and brilliant description. Amid a grand illumination of the national colors were apparent on all sides in streamers broad and narrow, and in flags of all sizes, dotted with gold and silver stars, which fairly seemed to twinkle. The decorative drapery of the sides of the building, hung in graceful festoons, bore amid its white shingles the names of those who were enabled to erect the structure, and of the several regiments and their respective coat of arms. At the south-west end of the building, over a handsomely finished, broad, semi-circular platform, there was a precious display of bunting, and in the
